

When the noise level is high and the proportion of dominant singular values is low, the threshold should be decreased; conversely, when the proportion of dominant singular values is high, the threshold should be increased.